New Venture for South Carolina's #1 Industry - Agribusiness

East Coast Ethanol based in Columbia, SC, has announced formal plans to build a corn-ethanol production facility in Chester County. The plant, one of four facilities that East Coast Ethanol plans to build around the Southeast, is expected to produce 110 million gallons of ethanol each year, hire 40 employees in the Chester County area, and generate more than $100 million annually for the local economy.

Hugh Weathers, South Carolina Commissioner of Agriculture, issued the following statement about the announcement:

Congratulations to East Coast Ethanol for locating a corn-ethanol plant here in South Carolina. This new business venture will fuel more than cars. When fully operational, it will help fuel our state's economy – pumping jobs and revenue into the state while energizing the business of agriculture. The bonus is that it will help bring our state and nation a step closer to a cleaner environment and energy independence.

East Coast Ethanol will be another jewel in the crown of South Carolina's largest industry - agribusiness. Agribusiness in South Carolina already has an economic impact of $34 billion, contributes 200,000 jobs, and generates a total $7.5 billion in direct and indirect annual labor income – more than any other segment of the state's economy.

For more information about the East Coast Ethanol announcement, contact the Chester County Office of Economic Development, 803-377-1216.

South Carolina Ag Council Presents "Alternative forms of Energy" - hosts Annual Holiday Fair

The fall quarterly meeting of the South Carolina Ag Council is scheduled to be held on Thursday, November 13, 2008. The meeting will be held at the SC Farm Bureau Office 724 Knox Abbot Drive, Cayce. Registration begins at 9:30 a.m. and the meeting starts at 10:00 a.m. followed by a Beaufort Stew lunch.

The meeting topic will be "Alternative Forms of Energy." Clemson researchers Dr. Ray Dodd and Kendall Kirk will present research on ethanol and bio-diesel. Jane Hiller, Sonoco Recycling Education Center, will talk about recycling. Speakers will also be on hand to discuss solar, wind, and nuclear power and hydrogen fuel cells. How viable are ethanol and bio-diesel and how do they fit into the overall concept of energy independence? How much energy can solar and wind power provide? What about nuclear energy? Why does recycling fit into an energy policy? What will power our automobiles in the future? Come to the meeting to hear the current thoughts on alternative energy.

Also, as has become a tradition, a Holiday Fair featuring South Carolina grown and produced products will be held in the lobby of the Farm Bureau. Everything from soup to nuts will be on sale. South Carolina products are gifts for all seasons.

Friends and guests are welcomed and encouraged. Anyone who has an interest in SC agriculture and the future of energy does not want to miss this enlightening and engaging meeting.

Deadline for advanced reservations of $8 for Ag Council members is Friday, November 7, 2008. Registration at the door or for non-members is $12 per person. The registration fee includes the Beaufort Stew lunch.

To pre-register or for more information call, Steve Slice, 803-806-3843, or e-mail Steve.Slice@sc.usda.gov.

Commissioner

Voices and Choices

Whew! We've just completed another election cycle in our country. Whether the outcomes suited you, we all have the choice to have our voice. That's one of the beauties of our country. We can choose politically, spiritually, athletically, economically, and probably a long list of other '...cally' things.

Collectively, drivers in our state, country and around the world 'voted' that gas prices were too high. By backing off the pedal and choosing our trips a little more carefully, we have reduced the demand for gasoline. And, voila, the markets worked; prices have receded from levels that helped in putting our economy in a stall.

Thanksgiving is around the corner, so we'll be heading somewhere. The AAA of the Carolinas say that over ½ million South Carolinians will be on the road. And, thankfully, the trip will cost less than it did on July 4th or Labor Day. While we enjoy the lower prices, it should not take away our awareness of this nation's dependence on foreign oil. Agriculture has been helping fight that battle.

When most people think of alternative energy, ethanol from corn instantly comes to mind. And the debate is that using corn for fuel is driving up the prices of animal feed and corn flakes at your local grocery store. According to Dr. Jim Frederick, bio-fuel researcher at Clemson's Pee Dee Research and Education Center (REC), that's not the case. We currently aren't using enough corn for ethanol to impact our food supplies, but that could change in the future as ethanol becomes more and more readily available.

South Carolina will soon be getting into ethanol production. On October 14 it was announced that a new ethanol plant will be built in Chester County. This new plant is expected to produce 110 million gallons of ethanol made from corn, wood chips and other renewable sources. According to folks at East Coast Ethanol, it will use 40 million bushels of corn to produce that amount of ethanol.

More importantly the new ethanol production facility will bring about 40 jobs and create a $100 million impact to the Chester County economy. As I mentioned in my last column, agribusiness is this state's number one industry with an estimated $34 billion and 200,000 jobs.

Soon, corn may not be the only ethanol source. I recently attended the inaugural Switchgrass conference at Clemson's Pee Dee REC in Florence. The day-long conference showed me once again how South Carolina and our farmers will have a direct impact on how this country will supply its own fuel. Switchgrass isn't like the grass growing in the front yard that needs mowing in the summer months. It's a big and tough plant and after a good growing season, it can stand 10 feet high, with stems as thick and strong as hardwood pencils. To the unscientific like me, it looks like a 3rd cousin to Johnsongrass.

The researchers at the Clemson Pee Dee REC are looking at switchgrass as a feedstock for alternative fuel. Statewide, about 30 scientists from SC State University, USDA Agricultural Research Service, USDA NRCS, Savannah River National Lab to name a few are experimenting with switchgrass. This group is working hard to make South Carolina agriculture a leader in fueling our nation.

One thing I see that's exciting about this perennial grass is that with one planting, a farmer can get 15 to 20 years of a crop. Switchgrass doesn't need as much fertilizer and has no known pests. Switchgrass is being researched here in our state because it's not only drought tolerant, it can be grown in places corn wouldn't grow - such as more sandy soils of the coastal plain. It also has the potential of producing 6 times the ethanol per acre as corn. The trick is to get from the field to the tank more economically.

So when you get the chance, be sure to 'vote' for energy independence with alternative energy from right here in South Carolina.

Environmental Awareness Award Nominations Sought

Nominations will be accepted through December 15, 2008 for an award to recognize South Carolinians who are doing extraordinary work for the natural environment. Guidelines and nomination forms for the SC Environmental Awareness Award are available at <http://www.dnr.state.sc.us/awards/environmental.html>, or contact Priscilla Wendt at 843-953-9305 or wendtp@dnr.sc.gov.

The SC General Assembly established the SC Environmental Awareness Award, now in its 17th year, during the 1992 legislative session to recognize outstanding contributions made toward the protection, conservation and improvement of South Carolina's natural resources.

Each year the public is invited to submit nominations that are then reviewed by an awards committee, which includes representatives from the state's environmental and natural resource agencies. In judging nominees, the committee considers excellence in innovation, leadership and accomplishments that influence positive changes affecting the natural environment.

Members of the awards committee represent the SC Department of Natural Resources, SC Department of Health and Environmental Control, SC Forestry Commission and SC Sea Grant Consortium.

Dr. Richard Porcher, Jr., professor emeritus at The Citadel, won the 2007 SC Environmental Awareness Award. Dr. Porcher has spent a lifetime studying plants and plant communities in South Carolina, and has generously shared his findings with students in the classroom and in the field. He has numerous publications to his credit, and has worked with state and federal agencies, as well as private non-profit organizations, to share his knowledge of the environment.

Breaking Land or Altering Wetlands? Be Careful; You Can Lose USDA Program Benefits

South Carolina farmers are urged to talk with conservation officials before draining any wet areas or bringing new land into production. State Conservationist Niles Glasgow with the South Carolina USDA Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) says farmers are under tremendous economic pressure to produce crops.

Not only are grain prices at historic highs, but land, rent, fuel and fertilizer costs are also skyrocketing. As they prepare for and complete harvest this fall, farmers should be cautious with managing wetlands in their fields, says Glasgow, since their eligibility for USDA farm program benefits could be at stake.

If you have a wet area which you're considering putting into a crop, come in and talk to the NRCS staff. "We can do a wetland determination to know if that area is a wetland or not and keep you out of trouble," says Glasgow.

Since the 1985 Farm Bill was passed, there have been provisions in place to protect our nation's wetlands and highly erodible cropland. Altering a wetland for the purpose of making production of an agricultural commodity possibly causes the farmer to become ineligible for USDA program benefits. Glasgow says, "Producers need to understand that USDA program ineligibility remains with the person even if the person is no longer associated with the land."

Some maintenance activities are allowed; however, producers should be careful to make sure the extent of the original manipulation is not exceeded. The best thing to do is check with your local NRCS office before taking action around wetlands. Landowners are also encouraged to ask NRCS staff about voluntary conservation programs that include financial assistance as an alternative to farming wetlands, which helps minimize the impact these wet areas have on farming operations.

"In addition, there may be other areas of grass that may not have been farmed before. If you're thinking about breaking those out," Glasgow says, "we can help you determine if that land is highly erodible or not and if it needs a conservation plan."

Glasgow says the NRCS staff wants to keep their customers in compliance by avoiding violating the 1985 Farm Bill's swampbuster and sodbuster provisions. NRCS wants to help producers avoid unintended violations with drainage or groundbreaking practices. "Most farmers know if they have a wetland in their fields. But if they've taken on any new land this year, they may not be sure what ties are on that land. If there's any doubt whether an area can be drained or broken out for farming, just come in and talk with the local NRCS staff."
